“To conquer the whole world for Christ through Mary Immaculate.”

The Marian Devotion of St. Anthony of Padua

Author: Franciscan Friars of the Immaculate

St. Anthony’s Devotion to the Holy Name of Mary

This glorious saint and doctor of the Church found great delight and strength in invoking the “sweet name of Mary”, the “New Eve” and “Star of the Sea”, with all her sacred privileges. However, his devotion to the poor, humble Virgin led him to perfectly imitate and mirror her in her poverty, littleness and purity of heart. He became, as it were, the presence of Mary in world by his holy life. Because he had been wholly transformed into ‘another’ Mary, who “always had her mind raised up to God in the contemplation of heavenly things”, so he merited to hold and adore the divine Infant with his own arms.

The Marian doctrine and devotion of this great saint, like two wings, lifted him up from this world and carried him into the sublime heights of holiness. May his profound wisdom and love for the Immaculate Virgin Mother of God inspire many to entrust themselves entirely to her without reserve and with full confidence so that she may illumine souls with the brilliance of her grace.

The Franciscan Friars of the Immaculate are a Roman Catholic Religious Institute of solemn vows headquartered in Benevento, Italy.

Three interesting Saints

I always encourage Catholics, especially young people, to read the lives of the saints and to look for those who are not so well-known. The lives you will find are much more interesting than today's celebrities, even if you know only one story in their biographies. Below are three examples about which I speak.

St. Tarcisius was an acolyte or perhaps a deacon at Rome. He was accosted and beaten to death on the Appian Way by a mob while carrying the Eucharist to some Christians in prison. The incident is included in Cardinal Wiseman's novel "Fabiola", and Pope Damasus wrote a poem about it. Tarsicius is the patron of first communicants and his feast day is August 15

St. Drithelm was a wealthy man of Northumbria, England, who supposedly died, experienced a powerful vision of heaven, hell, and purgatory, and then was found to be alive. He divided his possessions among his wife and children and made benefices for the poor before becoming a monk at Melrose Abbey. He lived as a hermit there with great austerities. St. Bede gives an account of his life. His feast day is this Wednesday, 17 Aug.

St. Hugh the Little was a martyred nine year old of Lincoln, England, reportedly a victim of ritual killing... King Henry III conducted the investigation of the crime which resulted in eighteen or nineteen (people being executed). Hugh had been scourged, crowned with thorns, and crucified. Miracles supposedly accompanied the recovery of the lad's body from a well, and the martyrdom became part of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. In art, he was depicted bound in cords, kneeling before the Blessed Mother.

Grade II listing protects 'dazzling' Crucifixion mural in closed Catholic Church

Following a long campaign led by SAVE Britain's Heritage, the government has added the 'Oldham Mural' masterpiece to its national heritage register – listed at Grade II.

Titled 'The Crucifixion', the post-WWII mural was completed in 1955 by Hungarian artist George Mayer-Marton and was designed for the Church of the Holy Rosary in Oldham. The church, on the edge of the town, is owned by the Diocese of Salford but closed in 2017 leaving the mural vulnerable to decay and vandalism.

The 7.5m long mural depicts the figure of Christ in golds and tans against a dark blue cross and gold mandorla. It was commissioned following the Festival of Britain when public art came to be seen as a symbol of civic renewal and social progress.

Sophie Andreae, Vice Chair of the Bishops' Conference Patrimony Committee, said:

"The George Mayer-Marton mural in Oldham's Holy Rosary Church is of great importance. The listing recognises this. The Patrimony Committee looks forward to working with Salford Diocese, and all interested parties, to ensure the protection and proper conservation of this outstanding artwork. This is now urgent."
